THE FLEISCHMAN-COX CAT LET OUT OF THE BAG

The following letter, sent out by the Fleischman Distilling Company of Cincinnati, speaks for itself:

(The addressee does not appear in the first letter because he at time of its appearance preferred it not to appear. When releasing the last one, he granted permission for its reproduction. This explains the "looking out" of the addressee in the first letter.)

DISTILLERS REDISTILLERS AND BLENDEES

Cincinnati Oct. 27, 1903.

Dear Sir:

Have you considered the importance of the approaching gubernatorial election in Ohio and how very seriously the result of this election will affect the liquor interests of this State?

It will vitally affect every business concern and every individual dependent for support, directly or indirectly, upon the liquor interests. A plain business proposition confronts us.

On the one hand, is a candidate who was nominated by the "Anti-Saloon League".

On the other hand, is a candidate whom that organization is fighting with every effective force at its command.

The election of the "Anti-Saloon" candidate, John W. Patterson, will mean the entire subservience to each and every restrictive and prohibitive policy for which the "Anti-Saloon" League openly and avowedly stands; it will mean the complete domination of the Legislature and a death blow to the liquor business and its allied interests in the State of Ohio.

It behooves the distiller, the wholesaler and the retailer to at once arise to the needs of the situation by instituting a personal and vigorous campaign for the protection of their business.

Every man interested, directly or indirectly, in their business welfare, should be talked with personally or written to, urging him to vote for Myron T. Herrick and against the "Anti-Saloon" candidate, John W. Patterson.

Your mailster, cooper, bar-fixture manufacturer, dealers in supplies of all sorts, grocer, butcher, friends - all of these - should be made to understand the serious importance to your interests which is involved in this election; urge each and every one of them, not only to vote for Herrick, but to join you in urging others to do likewise.

We trust that you will see the importance of working hard and incessantly from now on until the close of the polls on election day.

You must use every influence at your command to secure the salvation of your business interests.

Yours very truly,

To make sure that this was not a trap set by Boss Cox, the Fides Achates of Mayor Fleischman of Cincinnati, the recipient of the above letter sent the letter following in response, and promptly received the second Fleischman letter, which is given below, and which shows that Governor Herrick, at the bidding of George B. Cox, has joined forces with the saloons to control the administration of Ohio's public affairs, and the law making branch of the state government.

The Fleischmann Company,
Cincinnati, Ohio:

Akron, O., Oct. 2, 1903.

Gentlemen—We are much interested in the subject noted in your favor of the 27th ult., but regret that we can not report an encouraging state of affairs from this community. Governor Herrick's interests here are severely menaced by the unity and enthusiasm with which the temperance element is rallying to Patterson's support. To this is added some disaffection among Republicans on account of the silly charge that Mr. Cox controls the Republican organization.

Indeed, some of our own liquor dealers seem to want to keep aloof from the contest, fearing that by taking too prominent a part in the fight they will be inviting reactionary legislation or administration after the election. Some of them fear that the Republican organization will be in favor of such measures in order to recover the good will of the temperance element.

Can you not suggest to us how best to reassure our friends whom we find cold or indifferent in our course? It is apparent here that if this quarter of the state is to be saved to Herrick, strong organization measures must be resorted to.

We shall be glad to be of every service possible and any suggestions you may have will be gratefully received, by,

Yours very truly,

The Fleischmann Company

DISTILLERS REDISTILLERS AND BLENDEES

Western Division

Cincinnati Oct. 17th, 1903.

The Akron Cold Distilling Co.,

Akron, Ohio.

Gentlemen:

We are in receipt of yours of the 2nd inst., and regret exceedingly to hear of the unfavorable conditions obtaining in your community.

We have had among us here, some of our friends who also thought that it would be well to keep aloof and do any work which they thought necessary so quietly. They have, however, been won over to the policy of fighting in the open, and by the plain argument that the other side are fighting in the open and have always fought in the open, and that they never have showed the liquor men of the State any consideration and never will show them any consideration. Should the "Anti-Saloon League" be successful in electing their candidate and defeat Governor Herrick, they will point to this election as an example in the future and no man will ever dare become a candidate for the Legislature without the solicitation of their impartial support means bowing to their will.

If the liquor men all felt as some of your friends feel, we think we certainly should be defeated and our business menaced. On the other hand, by the election of the Republican ticket through the aid of the liquor men, they will have put themselves in a position of demanding something of the Republican Party that they have not been in a position to demand before, and that is to be left alone.

If they tell us to make no fight, they could claim no credit for our success.

We remain,

Respectfully,

Wm. Fleischmann

Treasurer.

The above correspondence shows a political, or rather a party, condition, never before known in Ohio, if indeed in the United States, when a single business interest undertakes to coerce those who are engaged in other interests to support it on compulsion, and this is the threat contained in the first letter.

Why should the grocer or the baker or the butcher be called on to abandon his political convictions and vote to promote the interest of the saloon?

Is the saloon working to increase the sales of the grocer, the baker or the butcher, and does the "prosperity" of the saloon put money in the pockets of the laboring classes to pay the grocer and baker and butchers for their goods? This is worth thinking about.

Judge Mathers

ed his trust. It was the terse statement of a truth that is apt to be ignored. It tore aside excuses and palliations and laid bare the ugly fact for all to see. The attorneys for the defense demurred at the characterization of their client's offense, but the judge did not withdraw the words; he felt sure of his ground in the case before him and explained the leniency of his thirty-day sentence by saying that it was light because the prisoner had other indictments to face.

"There has been altogether too prevalent an idea that what is public property is for anybody who can take; that it is no offense to charge a city, a county, the state or the nation more for a thing than would be charged in the case of an individual; that a public office is really a place of private gain, and that if the public suffer in consequence, it is not important, so small is the loss to the respective individuals who make up the public. The conscience has no doubt been dulled by these and kindred considerations, and it is time that something like that remark of Judge Mathers were said.

"Robbery is robbery, whether the victim be an individual or a collection of individuals, and for public robbery graft is but another name. The crime is just as black under the spacious logic of the robber as it is where there is no effort to hide its character.

"Judge Mathers has said a good thing. It ought to help men to see things as they are, and to put the grafter in his proper class as a thief.—Columbus Dispatch. (Republican.)

These newspapers know Judge Mathers not only because of his now famous declaration, a concise definition carrying with it conviction, but because he has come to their attention as a worthy judge.

From his own city, where party lines are strongly drawn, comes a recommendation for him from a Republican newspaper that has to do with the more restricted side of his life, his contact with his fellow townsmen,—his reputation as a gentleman and as a scholar.

"The Journal Gazette, while it did not have a word to say in the state convention, either for or against the nomination of Judge Hugh T. Mathers for supreme judge, being politically barred from that august body, the convention did a commendatory act in nominating so clean and competent a man for the high place, and it extends most hearty congratulations to one of the best citizens that ever trod the streets of Sidney. Born in this city of noble lineage, not so many years ago, for he is still young, passing through our public schools with honor, subsequently a student of the old and famous college of Princeton and receiving his law diploma from the equally high-toned law school at Albany, he is one of whom, irrespective of party, Sidney may well be proud, and it is in this spirit that the Journal Gazette does him honor. By his geniality he is a good mixer without descending to ignoble means to attain his ends; highly moral and religious in sentiment; public spirited in the furtherance of every good enterprise; upright, honest, fearless, and capable. The Democracy has done well in nominating so worthy a candidate, and it victory should crown him, the office will not be belittled but magnified."—Sidney (Ohio) Journal Gazette (Republican.)
